General Manone steals from the history of the Conkling-Platt difficulty in New | to the relative positions of himself and the Democratic party on the State-debt ques-He will not make known his wor and induce them to favor its adoption! In , his object is not to settle the debt in the interest of the Commonwealth transfer of capital from the northern The Washington Post says:

But, whether it has or has not, the assump tion that northern capitalists would rather intrust their money to the hands of Mathe white Democrats of Virginia is ludicrous in the extreme-we may say prepos terous. The experience which Mr. Collinson and the capitalists whom he represented had with MAHONE some years age and their knowledge of his financial methods have rendered his name a by-word and a reproach on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean. The Virginia agent of the bondholders-Mr. ROYALL-seems to think so little of MAHONE's patent scheme for settling the State debt that he has not been heard to say a single word in advocacy of it. Briefly, if Virginia is to wait for capital until Manone attracts it to her enterprises she will have to wait until the Greek calends. Manone may be ready to play a little game of his own, but his would-be victims have either cut their eye-teeth experientially or have been warned by friends to beware of the "little joker." He, who pocketed $25,000 a year from a poverty-stricken railroad company for services worth less than nothing, and went to England to negotiate a loan in the interest of that company, is so well known This to an inquirer. beyond the great waters that for the people of Virginia to elect him their Governor would be for them to create the impression in England that they did not desire to have the State debt settled at all.

But the people of Virginia have not the silver lining. least intention of electing Manone to be their chief magistrate. Again and again have they voted him down. They elected Danies over him. They elected Barbour over him. They will elect McKINNEY over him. The public career of their worst enemy is nearing its end. Charles II. of England asked "What has become of all "General Sherman's my enemies?" Manone, if he knew his fate, would be asking "What has become of all my friends?"

"Bargam and Sale." We are glad to see in the Philadelphia Telegraph our article headed "Mahones Object," in which we quoted the Valley Virginian, the organ of the real Republicans of Virginia, to show what that object If reputable northern Republicans only knew such facts as the Virgin through us and the Telegraph, has laid before them, they would not contribute a dollar to the corruption fund of MAHONE, though, truth to say, we have never been at all afraid that the northern Republienough to percolate through the hands of the Manone "stickers" into those of the colored brethren or the white Mahoneites who do the voting. Old Joe Brown once once said to a reporter who asked him if all the United States senators were millionaires, "A million of dollars is a good deal of money." It is not easy to raise that sum. Well, we think that it would take at least a million of dollars to satisfy the greedy Mahoneites; and the relatively small contribution which they will get from northern monopolists will not hurt the Virginia Democrats.

However, this is not the point we had in-tended to make. As the Philadelphia Tele-graph has permitted its readers to see the article we have mentioned, we will take the liberty of quoting from that journal what it says as to the "bargain and sale" proit says as to the "bargain and sale" proposed by the negro Lancarox. We quote:

"The last striking object-lesson in practical politics has been furnished with most engaging frankness by that eminent colored man, brother, and patriot, J. M. Langston, of the Old Dominion. There is a frankness exhibited in the making of his demands which would be simply brutal if politics were different from what it is—if it were not, for instance, a matter of bargain and sale, instead of patriotism and statesmanship, as it should be: Mr. Langston has no reason, as will be hereafter perceived, for leving General Mahone, but he has sternly resolved to condone the offence of the Republican caudidate for Governor of Virginia if his terms shall be accepted. They are rather high, but not too high, apparently, to be accepted. It is not the milk of human kindness, turning his bitter gall to the sweetest cream, which, surging in Mr. Langston becom, induces him to support with his voice, vote, and influence his enemy General Mahone. Nothing like that impels him to go upon the atump to aid his late antagonist. He has weightier reasons; and he has in the frankest, not to say the most brutal, manner publicly stated what they are. He will, he says, support Mahone, and by and through his influence over the the colored voters of Virginia elect him Governor, if the Republican National Committee and the Republican majority of Congress pledge themselves to give him the seat in Congress.

"Such a demand as this, endorsed as it too, by some respectable and influential publican papers, is a striking illustra-in of the demoralizing political methods

This is bargain and corruption and negro impudence. It shows that even intelligent, educated negroesare after all nothing but negroes. Langston sees, and can b made to see, no impropriety in his offer to trade speeches for votes. It would be as unprofitable to attempt to show him wherein such a proposal is "brutal," to use the Telegreph's word, as it would be to try to impart to a blind man a knowledge of colors. He regards Republican congressmen as judges open to bribes.

So much for Landston. As to the bargain with Manone the Telegraph says:

"General Mahone thinks little of the white vote, however; his chances of success lie chiefly in his ability to march the colored voter solidly to the polls to his support, and apart from them to get a few thousand white votes by hook and by crook?"

crook."

"The breaking of the solid Democratic South has been the most splendid dream of the Republican party's managers since the reconstruction laws ceased to operate and the carpet-baggers to dominate the southern Commonwealths. The feeling has been commonly shared by them that the break could and should be made in Virginia. They have, on the occasion of every recurring presietween the Administration and Gener
